

The Challenges of Graduate Life

Cultivating A Spiritual Life NOW

Graduate life. It may be new to you this term or you may know it well. Pressures abound—academic, financial, personal, competitive—the combination can knock the wind out of you.

There can be a great temptation to postpone spiritual priorities while in graduate school. Resist the temptation. Life only gets more challenging as you take on new responsibilities in teaching, research, or a position in industry.

When you commit yourself to spiritual development, you are developing a critical habit necessary for lifelong Christian growth. More than that, you are choosing not to shut down the core of your being. You're choosing life. Now is the time to experience God working in you and through you.

"I don't think I would have survived graduate school without having fellowship and knowing God."

Thriving in a Christian Grad Community

Your relationship with God is personal, but God never intended the Christian life to be lived alone. Sometimes, surrounded by secular peers, professors and philosophy, it definitely feels like you're alone as a Christian.

What if you could be part of a dynamic community of believers on campus that understands you, affirms your calling, and offers support in pursuing your spiritual goals? You can.

Your Campus Christian Graduate Community

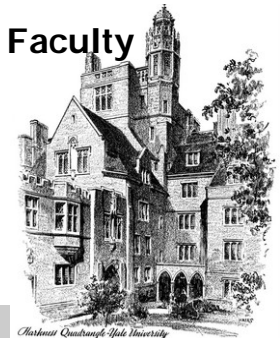

We're Here

We're committed to establishing believers in their faith, encouraging one another, and becoming equipped for effective ministry to our secular friends and colleagues.

We want to develop Christ-like character and biblical convictions, to tackle tough issues together, and to fully integrate our faith and our academic disciplines.
